

December 4, 2019

Japan Formula 3 Association

Super Formula Lights series champion will be privileged to test in the Super Formula

As previously announced the Japanese Formula 3 championship ended its 41-year history and will be reborn for 2020 as a new series named Japanese Super Formula Lights championship (SFL). Japan Formula 3 Association has been closely working together with Japan Race Promotions to create an award, which privileges series champion to participate in the Super Formula rookie test.

The aim is to continue to undertake the role of the Japanese Formula 3 championship as a step up the ladder for drivers to go up to higher series including the Super Formula championship, and put more focus on producing good drivers.

The Super Formula series has attracted more domestic and international attention lately, and we believe testing in the Japan's top-tier series will give SFL's champions a great opportunity to further develop their careers.

We are currently finalizing the 2020 testing schedule with distance to cover to allow youngsters to gain good experience in the championship, and hope to confirm the details of the 2020 season including the entrants as soon as possible.

Your continued support for the Japanese Super Formula Lights championship will be greatly appreciated.